The role of NGOs and the relationship with governmental agencies

ó The public sphere is not a state monopoly.
ó Social participation is generated by the people and is an essential mechanism between the State and society.
ó Key step in making politics a more democratic process.
ó Civil society as a key player in the design, implementation, and evaluation of policies.
Best Practices

- There are experiences of joint and coordinated efforts on specific project (implementation).
- To a lesser extent, in design and evaluation
- Recognition of the role played by NGOs is recent and not yet fully incorporated (CICAD)
- The field of HIV/AIDS projects provides interesting models of coordination.
- At the level of intergovernmental agencies: UNAIDS has a civil society formally represented in the Program Coordinating Board, its governing body.
- At the national level: the majority countries have formalized the participation of civil society in the national commissions, Country Coordinating Mechanisms, or through other methods.

Strengthening Capacities

- Networking strengthens NGOs and the State by providing a more integrated approach
- Transparency and mutual auditing process
- Take advantage of respective developments. Ex: “Guide to Drug Policy” of the EDPC
Other actors from civil society

- Needed to ensure different perspectives and alternative actions.
- Need to be engaged in decision-making that affects the most affected communities, including drug users and academia.
- Needed to broaden the perspective beyond “NGO experts on drugs” (human rights movements, indigenous organizations, community-based social organizations).

Challenges and opportunities

- To maintain and further the agenda of CICAD for/with civil society.
- Include representatives of NGOs and civil society experts in thematically pertinent discussions.
- Mandate of the VI Summit of the Americas:
  - Opportunity to carry out an independent assessment, one that reflects the diverse perspectives.
  - Relevance of including NGOs and experts in all stages of an evaluation process.
Expectations of the IDPC

- IDPC is available to assist in assessing the impact of implemented policies.

- IDPC recommends to resume important work, such as the recently published “Drug policy and the public good” by PAHO.

- IDPC hopes to contribute to the development of new studies: we consider it important to include new indicators and questions to establish successful criteria.

Thank You!
